DRY GOODS NOTES

not much happening right now. macadamias and hemp seed are in. i'll try to remember to check the wish list this week. i find i often get distracted by other duties and forget to look. oh, the local black beans, from allan in noti, are in short supply this year. we're able to get some cause we've been getting them for at least 15 years, hummingbird is not selling them to those who haven't purchased them before as the supply is that short.

i was out at fair site yesterday and adrian sent me the latest kila cd which arrived yesterday so between the two i'm feeling a bit recharged. thankfully. stay warm, sue

HERB CLASSES

Sunnyside Herbs will be starting its classes for 2011 on Sunday, Feb. 20th. The first level is 5 weeks long and will cover basics of fundamental herbal skills such as: cultivation and ethical harvesting of herbs, making medicinal preparations, basics of botany, plant identification, creating an herbal library and organoleptic skills.

Each class will include time outside in the garden as well as a Teatime where we taste a plant in tea form and learn about it in more depth. There are often volunteer medicinal plant starts that find new homes with students.

Classes are held in my home and garden in Corvallis. There are brochures with more info on the bulletin board at growers. You can contact me at jacimck@hotmail.com or 541-758-9156. Jaci (McKamey) Guerena
